A. The reporting and investigating on law enforcement actions in many current media outlets have gone from fact and evidential based reports to opinion and perceived reports. Today's sensationalizing of news has caused many positive law enforcement actions with citizens to be reported with negative connotations, where facts have less value in a story than perception of events. The assassination of a good officers character and career is not often thought of when the media wants to sell their story.

What advice would you give an officer who may have experienced a media reported story, whereby the twisting of facts caused them to be viewed by others in a negative light, when they were only acting in a positive and professional manner? Should the officer try to defend their actions in the media or allow the story stand as reported? Please defend your choice.

Have you or someone you have known every experience such a perceptual injustice of facts in any situation and if so, how was it handled? Please describe the factual reality and the negative perceptual views by others. Has this experience changed you in any way?

B. What is your perception on how today's Law Enforcement Officer is viewed within your community? (Explain: Positive and Negative perspectives). What advice would you give to a local police officer on how best to effectively communicate to citizens within your community?

C. In Law Enforcement, officers are required to multi task throughout their shifts, they have many responsibilities that change at a moments notice. An officer must be very effective and efficient at time management, to write police reports, investigate criminal cases, while still finding the time to interact with the citizens in the assigned area. Describe how you have prepared yourself to be able to successfully function in college? What experiences and responsibilities have you have taken on as a student that you feel makes you ready and qualified to multi task at the next level in your educational journey?

D. From a financial standpoint, what impact would this scholarship have on your education and family circumstances?
